As an undergraduate, I went to Mills College in Oakland, California and then on to the University of Pennsylvania for graduate work in American Civilization. After marrying a fellow student at Penn, we moved to Northern New Jersey, where we both taught. I loved teaching and loved being close to Manhattan with the museums, the ballet, and all of the wonderful New York delis.

While teaching, I began work in teacher training and, loving that work, earned a doctorate at Rutgers in English Education. After several years as a curriculum director, and after an amicable divorce, I moved back to the west coast, accepting a faculty position at the University of Puget Sound Graduate School of Education.

I've recently retired, but the time at the university was a marvelous experience with teaching and with colleagues. In addition to the graduate school work, I directed the Women Studies program and participated in university/community work on equity in education. Before retiring in 2009, I also served as the Dean of Education.

I'm thoroughly enjoying retirement! I'm a docent at Seattle Art Museum and, next year, a training chair for docents. I love the museums in Seattle, the galleries, the Pacific Northwest Ballet, but still miss those New York delis!

I live in Tacoma on Puget Sound and never tire of walking along the water, seeing the Olympics, or enjoying the Tacoma museums. I'm grateful for good friends, family close by, adventures in the Northwest and, since retirement, in adventures abroad.

I'm looking forward to seeing the terrific SSSH '63 folk!
