This is a pretty amazing time in my life. After being single since 1996 when Sam's Dad and I divorced I am now with a man I met 35 years ago.

He is a retired child psychiatrist who came to San Francisco from Stockholm, Sweden in 1978 to study therapy and we met through a colleague. We fell in love and for about four years tried to put our lives together with me even living in Sweden for six months. It was just too complicated with him being divorced and having three young children. We parted sadly and went on with our lives. In 2010 he called me on Skype as his son and family were living in the States for a year and we renewed our love story.

When I come to the reunion we will have been married on July 20th in Sweden. It's a bit of a fairy tale but seems to have a happy ending! Now I finally plan to retire from my job managing the Psychiatry Dept at Palo Alto Medical but now I am ready. We would like to live in Sweden in the summers, California in the winters, and travel as much as possible. Next spring we are planning a trip to the Mediterranean from Sweden on his boat. Coincidentally he lives in Malmo now where I hear our class foreign exchange student is living. Life is full of unexpected surprises and this has certainly been a good one for me. Unfortunately he will still be in Sweden at the time of the reunion but I will be there and look forward to seeing everyone.

My son, Sam, who will turn 26 in June, is just finishing a job as a page at NBC in Los Angeles and is now working for a TV Production company. It is fun to hear about all the interesting people he meets.
