After graduating from South Salem High School, I headed east to Whitman College. It turned out to be a wise decision and I loved my four years there. I met my first husband in geology class at Whitman, and after my graduation as a music major we moved to New York City where he attended seminary. I taught at a selective church-affiliated school there, and then at a Greek elementary school, both of which were interesting experiences. It was exciting to live in New York, but I was happy to leave after our son was born. We then spent a few years at a church in Ohio where we adopted a baby girl. We ended up at a small church in Seattle, where we still both live

I soon went to work teaching second grade at Seattle Country Day School, where I worked for over 30 years. After a few years as a single parent following the breakup of my first marriage, I met and married my husband Harlan, a friend-of-a-friend computer engineer who is now also retired. My last few years at SCDS were spent as a part-time music teacher, and during my last two years there I had the privilege of teaching my first grandson – fun for me but maybe a little confusing for him. We are both avid choral singers and sing with our large church choir as well as several audition groups. We love to travel, and tours with our various choirs have taken us to Germany, Italy, the British Isles, Mexico, Spain, and Hungary.

We spend lots of time with the grandsons, who fortunately live only a few miles from us. Life is good!
